

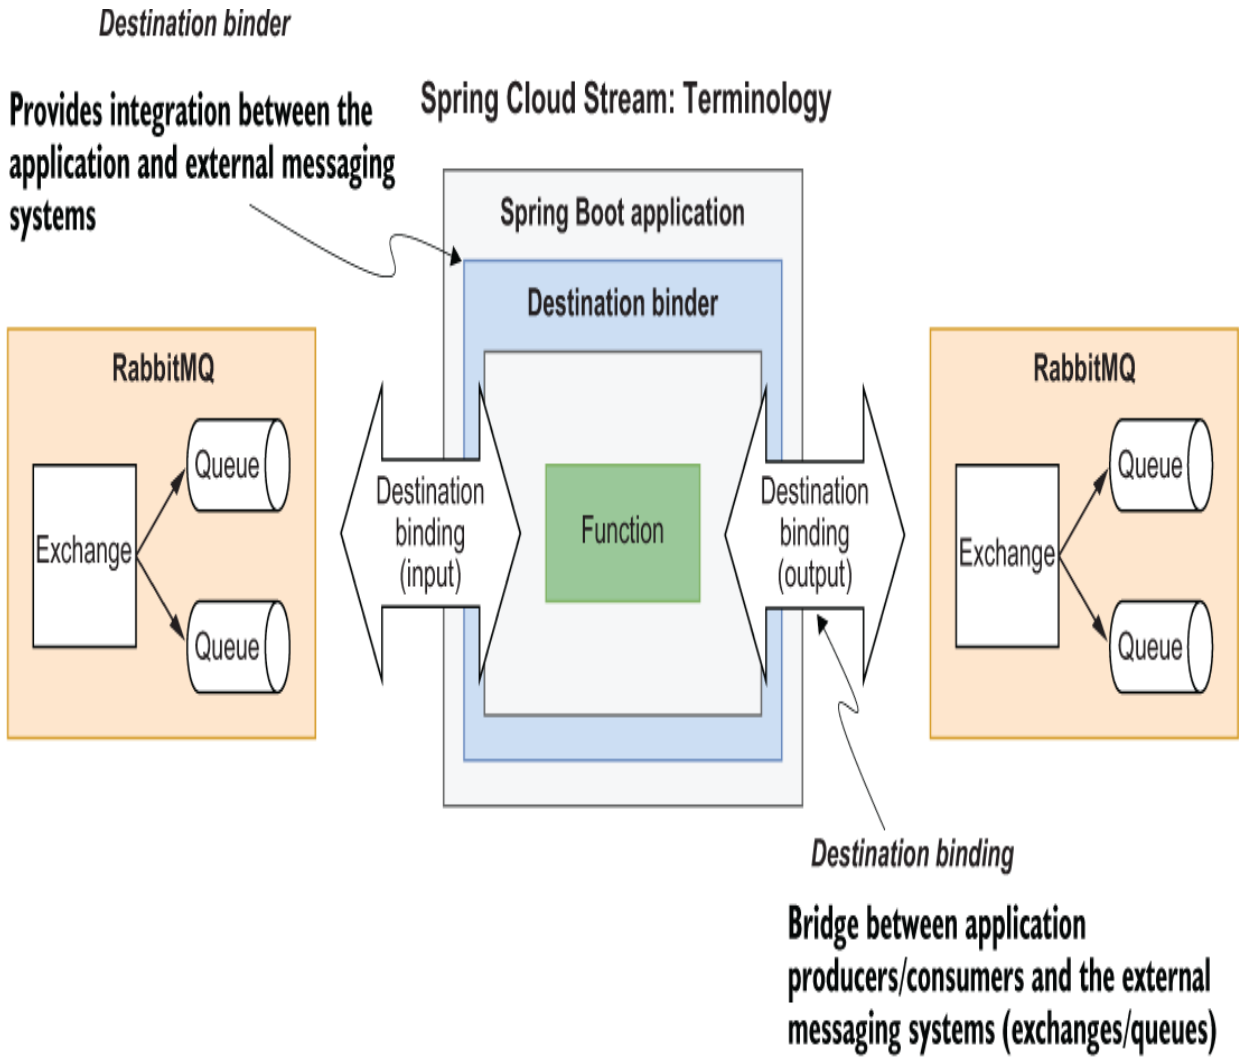

Figure 10.10 In Spring Cloud Stream, bindings establish message channels between applications and message brokers.

Spring Cloud Stream provides a Spring Boot application with a destination binder that integrates with an external messaging system. The binder is also responsible for establishing communication channels between the application producers and consumers and the messaging system entities (exchanges and queues for RabbitMQ). These communication channels are called destination bindings, and they are bridges between applications and brokers.