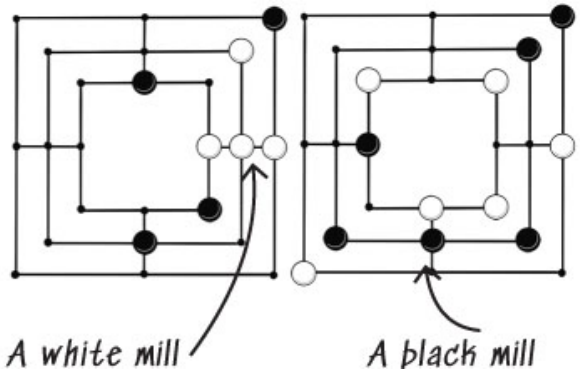
3 Decide who’s going to play black and who’s playing white.

4 To start the game, the players take turns putting one of their pieces down on the dots.



Your aim is to make rows of three, connected by a straight line—like the ones you can see here. A row of three is called a “mill.”

5 Whenever you make a mill, you can take one of your opponent’s pieces off the board. You can’t take a piece from one of their mills, unless there are no others to take.

6 When both players have put down all their pieces, they take turns moving one of their pieces. They can only move along the lines from one dot to an empty dot next to it. (No jumping over pieces or hopping between lines.)

7 With each move, keep trying to make more mills (straight lines of three). Every time you create a new mill, you get to take another of your opponent’s pieces.
