and affected children with the new data, completing the cycle (see figure 4.5). This clear, downward flow avoids unintended side effects and supports centralized state management, making large applications more reliable and easier to scale.

Figure 4.5 One-way data binding between parent and child components.

