The data collection services will get data from the specific data schemas in your source systems and map them to your domain objects. In some cases this is a simple mapping, but others will include functions that combine or calculate data into fields that aren't in the source system. Sticking with JIRA as an example, the next listing shows excerpts of the data collection service for JIRA.

Listing B.3. Collecting data from JIRA

