
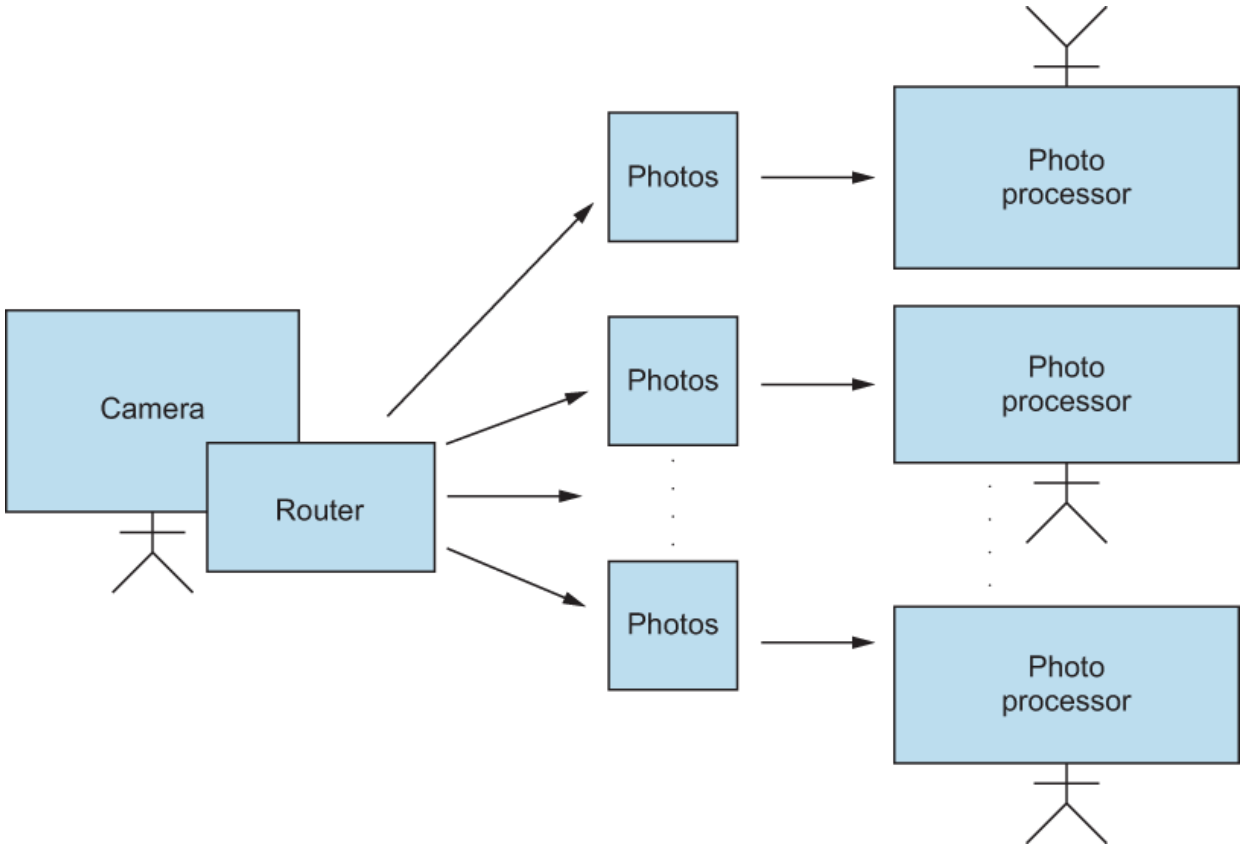

Figure 6.1 Camera routing for performance

Depending on whether a photo processor is busy, it processes the photos or sends a message to the camera to inform it that the photos could not be processed. If it is available, it analyses the photos and extracts the license plate, speed, and so on. Figure 6.2 shows how the photo processor reacts differently depending on its state. The reason for using this router is to control the state of the message flow.