3.2 Layout pages

It is a rare website that doesn't share common content across multiple pages. Later in the book, you will build a web application that offers vacation packages. An outline sketch of this type of site might well look something like figure 3.2.

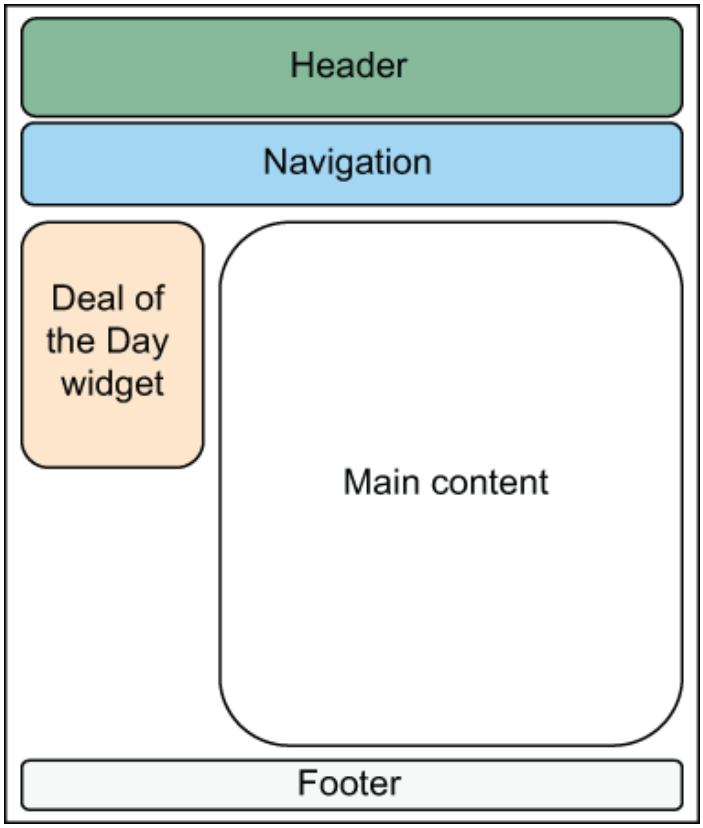

Figure 3.2 The header, navigation, Deal of the Day widget, and footer in this example are intended to appear on all pages. The main content area represents the content specific to each page.

In the sample sketch, the header, navigation, Deal of the Day widget, and footer are intended to appear on all pages in the site. The actual content of some of those elements might vary from page to page, but the basic structure will apply to all pages. The main content area represents the page-specific content, which might be a contact form and a postal address on a Contact Us page, or it might be details of breaks on offer in a specific location. The following listing shows how the image might be translated to HTML, using basic Bootstrap styles.
