

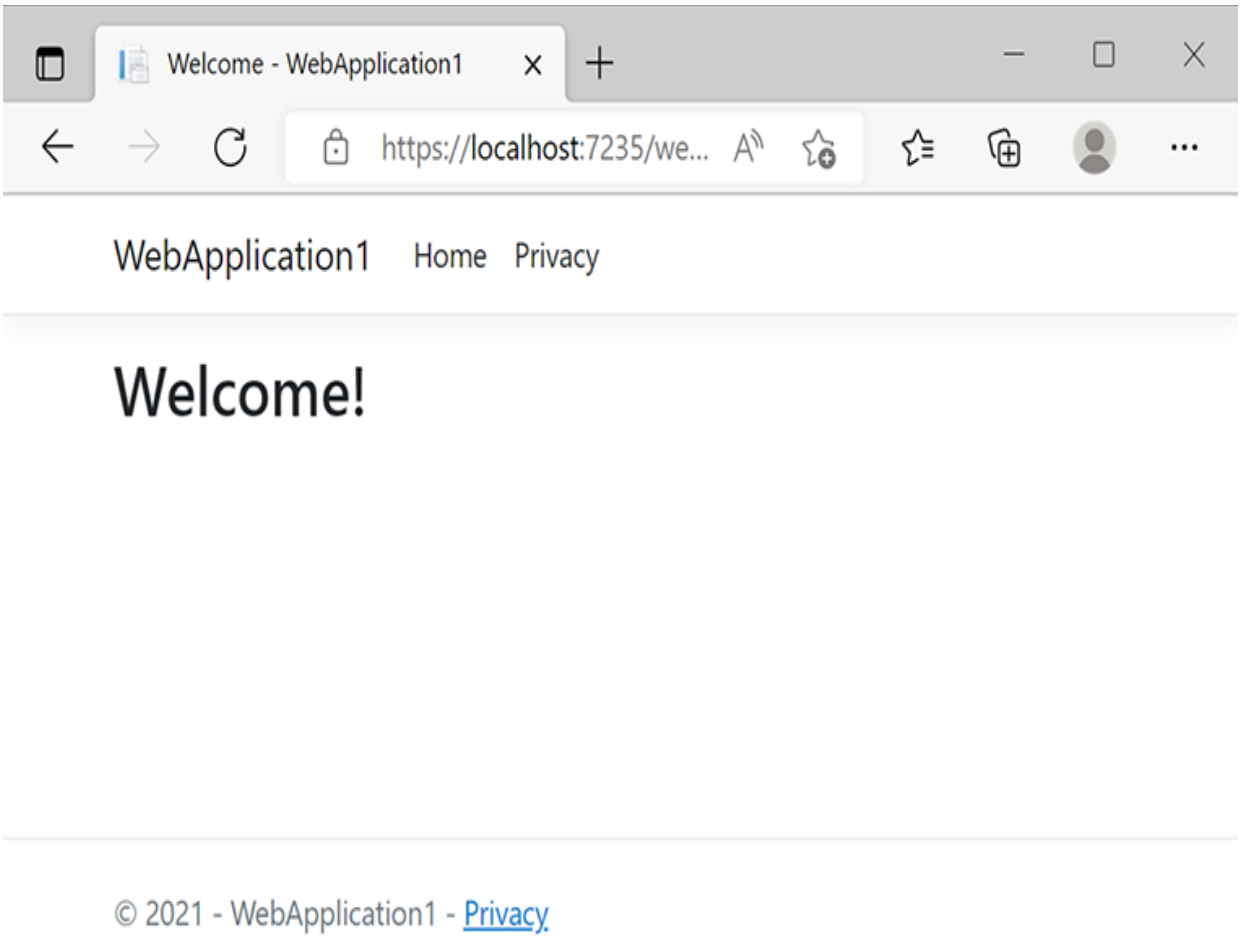

Figure 2.8 The changes that were made to the Razor page are visible without having to refresh the browser.

2.1.5 Modifying to include dynamic content

What you have added so far is static content. Every time you run this page, it will look the same. The whole point of using Razor Pages is to display dynamic content, so now it's time to add some. Let's imagine you need to include the name of the part of the day (e.g., morning, afternoon, or evening) in your output—perhaps, as part of delivery confirmation instructions (e.g., "Your package will be with you in the morning"). First, you need to calculate the part of the day from the time, and then you need to render it.