

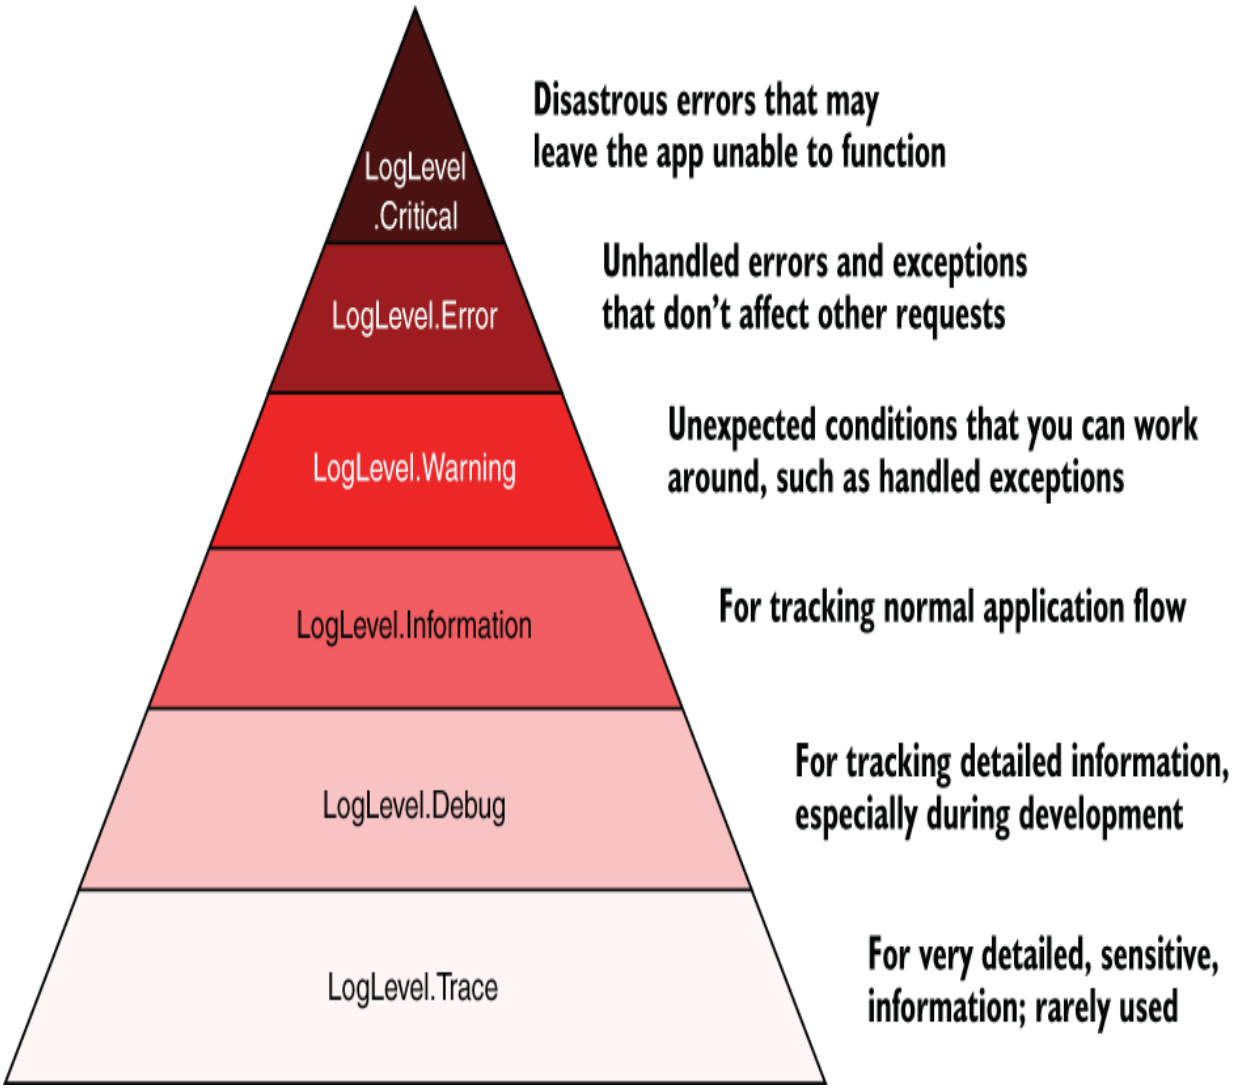

Figure 26.5 The pyramid of log levels. Logs with a level near the base of the pyramid are used more frequently but are less important. Logs with a level near the top should be rare but are important.

This pyramid shape will become more meaningful when we look at filtering in section 26.4. When an app is in production, you typically don't want to record all the `Debug`-level messages generated by your application. The sheer volume of messages would be overwhelming to sort through and could end up filling your disk with messages that say "Everything's OK!" Additionally, `Trace` messages shouldn't be enabled in production, as they
