In some cases, before sending a real request to your API, the browser sends a preflight request, a request sent using the `OPTIONS` verb, which the browser uses to check whether it's allowed to make the real request. If the API sends back the correct headers, the browser sends the true cross-origin request, as shown in figure 29.7.