me going through such a busy time. You've taken the brunt of my stress and pressure, and I'm eternally grateful. I love you always.

I'd also like to thank my whole family for their support, in particular my parents, Jan and Bob, for putting up with my ranting; my sister, Amanda, for your always upbeat chats; and of course, Goose, for diligently ensuring that I take regular breaks for walks and tummy tickles.

On a professional level, I'd like to thank Manning for giving me this opportunity. Brian Sawyer "discovered" me for the first version of this book and encouraged me to tackle the subsequent versions. Marina Michaels served as my development editor for the third time running and again proved to be alternately meticulous, critical, encouraging, and enthusiastic. The book is undoubtedly better thanks to your involvement.

Thank you to my review editor, Adriana Sabo, and to all the reviewers: Alen Adanić, Ben McNamara, Bela Istók, Darrin Bishop, Dennis Liabenow, Al Pezewski, Emmanouil Chardalas, Foster Haines, Onofrei George, John Guthrie, Jean-François Morin, Pedro Seromenho, Joe Cuevas, José Antonio Martinez Perez, Joe Suchy, Luis Moux, Milan Šarenac, Milorad Imbra, Nik Rimington, Nitin Ainani, Oliver Korten, Raushan Jha, Richard Young, Rick Beerendonk, Ron Lease, Ruben Vandeginste, Sumit K. Singh, Towhidul Bashar, Daniel Vásquez, and Will Lopez. Your suggestions helped make this a better book.

My thanks go to the technical editor for this book, Filip Wojcieszyn, who is a founder and maintainer of several popular open-source projects, frequent conference speaker, and a Microsoft MVP. Filip provided invaluable feedback, highlighting my incorrect assumptions and technical biases, and ensuring technical correctness in everything I wrote.