

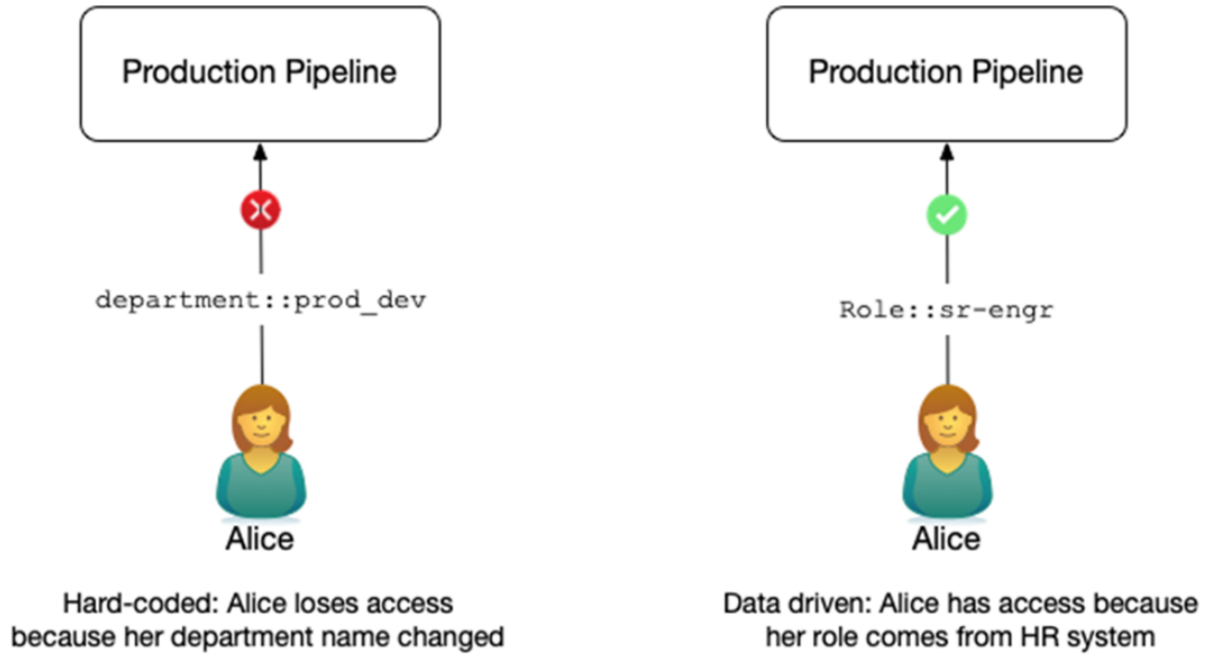

Figure 10.3 Hard-coded versus data-driven policies. An employee can lose access when the policy checks department names directly but keeps access when the policy references durable roles from the HR system.

Decoupling policies from unstable organizational data ensures they, along with access to the assets they protect, remain consistent even as the organizational structure changes.