

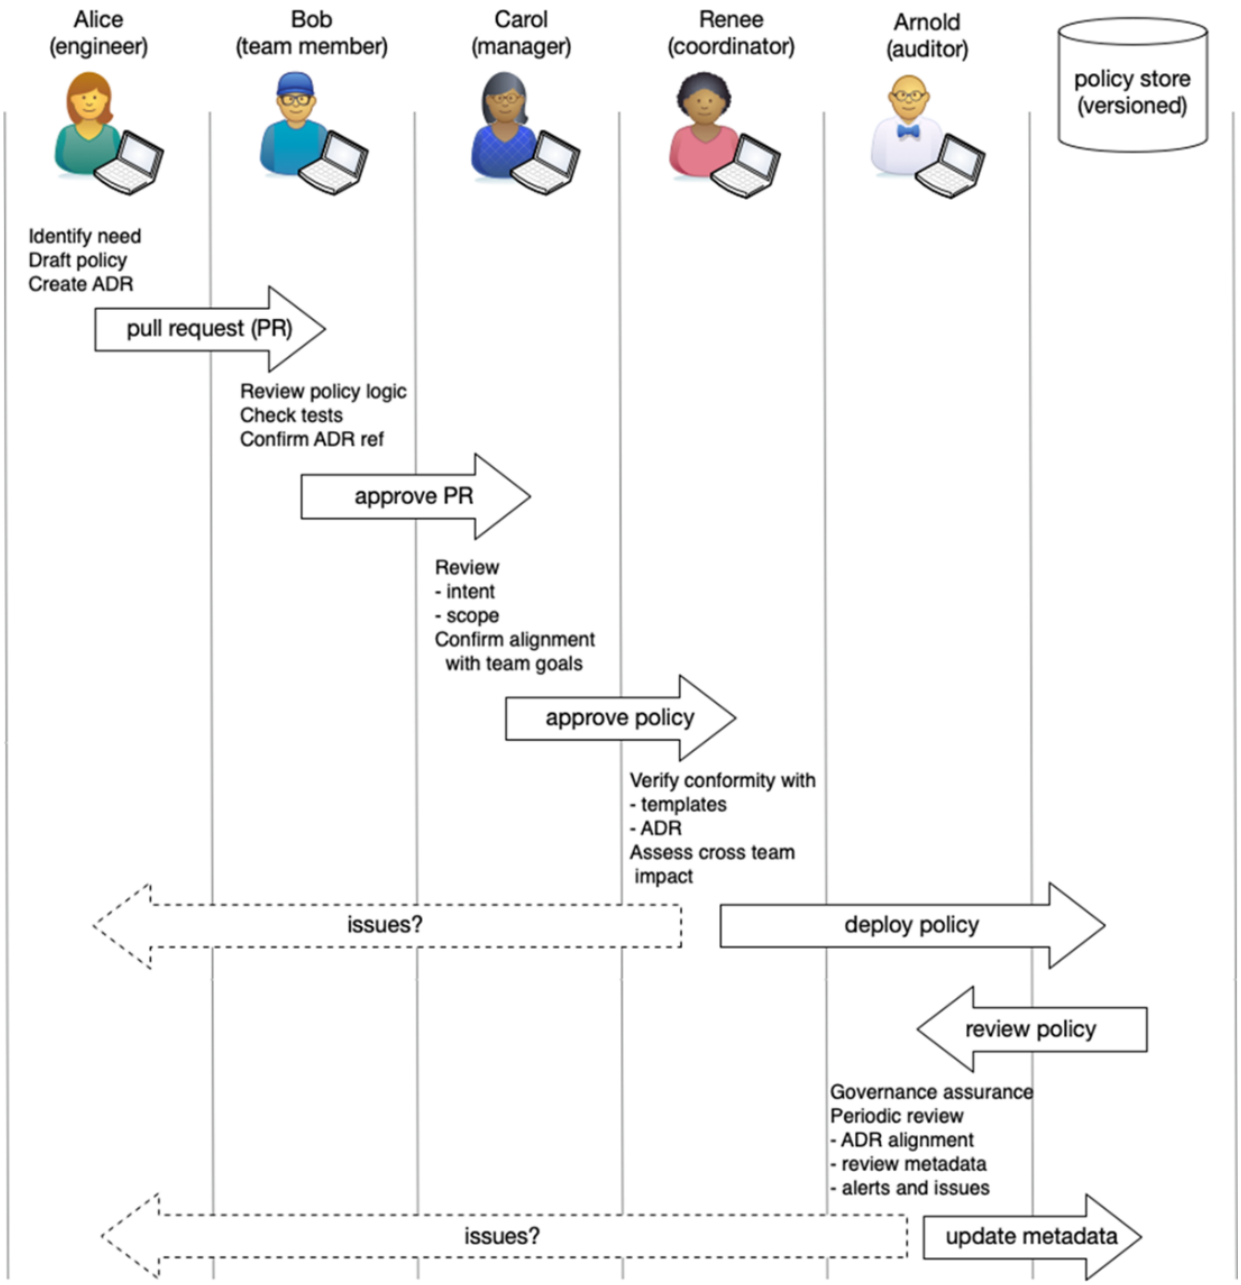

Figure 14.5 Policy governance workflow across roles. Authorization policies move through clearly defined roles from creation to deployment and review. Engineers author and review policy logic, managers approve intent and scope, access control coordinators ensure alignment across teams, and auditors verify that governance processes are followed over time. Separation of duties and feedback loops preserve accountability without centralizing control.

These roles lay the foundation of ACME's federated model: local accountability within teams and global coherence through coordination. Governance succeeds not by central control but by making each participant responsible for upholding the organization's expression of institutional will.
